Management’s Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

FUND PERFORMANCE CAN BE ATTRIBUTED TO THE FOLLOWING:

Security selection within local-currency sovereign credit was one of the biggest contributors to performance, with positions in South Africa and Brazil benefiting from strong investor demand, favorable technicals, and broad dollar weakness. Local-currency sovereign bonds were the strongest performer across Emerging Market (“EM”) fixed income in 2025, supported by broadening disinflation, elevated real rate buffers, and credible policy frameworks.

The Fund also benefited from an overweight positioning in the financial sector, where selection (to Turkish financials for example) also played a key role in performance.

The Fund also benefited from exposure to select idiosyncratic high-yield sovereign situations, most notably Argentina, where bonds rallied nearly 20% following stronger-than-expected midterm election results, making it a key contributor to performance earlier in the year.

Allocation to BB-rated sovereign and corporate credit added to performance, supported by strong risk appetite and spread tightening across high-yield issuers.

The Fund’s exposure to select China property names detracted from performance, as these positions gave back prior gains amid renewed stress.

The Fund’s underweight to EM low-beta local markets detracted during several periods, particularly when “sell the U.S.” narrative was particularly strong and all EM local currencies benefitted, including low yielders, as the dollar weakened.
